Presentation

I've studied photography at the ENSP in Arles and Contemporary Arts at HEAD in Geneva. My work has been exhibited in France (CACIN Les Tanneries - 2024) and abroad (MC2 Gallery Milan - 2017, French Alliance of Bogotá - 2015) in solo exhibitions (Galerie Les Filles du Calvaire - 2017, 2015), group shows (Collection Lambert - 2021) and fairs (Paris Photo, Unseen Amsterdam, Art Bruxelles). In 2020, I was an artist-member of the Casa de Velázquez in Madrid, and I've lived and worked in Marseille since then.

I am developing a multidisciplinary practice driven by the question of image and agentivity. It questions the relationship between humans and their environment by using images, objects or gestures, often brought into dialogue through installations or films. My work is about encounters, sensations and uncertainty, and for me, images are a means of apprehending the world without attempting to grasp it completely.

For roughly 8 years, I've been developing, nourishing and investigating two main projects: For the Birds and In Watermelon Sugar. For the Birds explores our relationship to birds through a series of co-animated videos and artefacts. The project digs into amateur strategies of building contact with animal by giving gifts, sharing meals, addressing images or mimicking mating choreography. With In Watermelon Sugar I also use video and sculpture, this time to delve into stories of consumption, edible images, and food production. Sugar is linked to conservation and conversely to ephemerality, it's everywhere in our diet and it has helped shaping capitalism. I like to play with multiple ambiguities carried by this ingredient and the infinite material possibility it has to offer, with sculptures that never go too far from the kitchen.

In my work, bodies and materials, human and non-human, become agents of relationships where the human presence is no longer central. I set up situations with often unpredictable outcomes, in which everyone's place is rendered blurred and unstable. I invest the complex relationships that bind us to our environment in order to speculate on new stories.

In Watermelon Sugar brings together films and sugar sculptures to question our bodily relationship to images and objects through gastronomy, literature and cinema. In this project, I explore sugar both as a material with very specific properties and as a controversial ingredient at the core of our civilisation. My sculptures have a dual existence: they are used in videos as props or set pieces, and in installations as edible, evolving sculptures. The videos allow these ephemeral objects to be inscribed in the long term, giving them form and agentivity.

During a 6-month residency at the Contemporary Arts Center Les Tanneries, I developed a new piece in this project. Entitled Toucher de bouche, it explores the theme of sugar production. Firstly, sugar production linked to beet crops and refining process which are widespread in the Loiret region. Secondly, the production of new narratives rooted in our collective histories and based on encounters with farmers, pastry chefs, students in the area.

Le beurre (film), For the Birds, 2020

Shot in Spain between Madrid et Cuenca, « [...] For the Birds is a film made up of a collection of sketches (saynètes) presenting a multiple character, seeking to forge a relationship with the birds by means of unusual materials — sugar, fat — or poetic approach techniques — idle waiting, choreography of gestures, amateur art practice. The uncharacter in this film — an illusionist dandy, a lard sculptor, a painter of the insides of jackets, a living statue, a lover of fights but also of naps — is an experimenter. Inventor of multiple meanings and of composite, mobile modes of action derived from opportunities, he avoids the seriousness of a scientific approach by being burlesque and thus allows the emergence of another modality to be present in the world, in relation to nature and birds. The result is the creation of an ecosystem of forms whose natural or artificial qualities are captured in a comic game of reversing values ».

Musical improvisation, Huihui Cheng

Video (loop, 20 min), Benjamin Mouly

2 pianos, mallet, stainless steel bowl, scotch tape, rubber apple

The inauguration of the film Le beurre, For the Birds was accompanied by a musical improvisation by composer Huihui Cheng. Using two pianos - one tuned, the other untuned - we established a protocol that enabled Huihui to navigate between several types of sound, with a desire to disrupt the conventional relationship between image and sound. Music can confer a color or a mood to a film, but it can also disorient the viewing experience with sound effects, for the example.

Remains of sugar props (bottles, shoes, etc.)

In an old cream-colored Mercedes 350 Slc parked in a barn, I'm showing the raw footage from a film I've just shot in the village of Elliant, in Brittany. I talk about the invisible part of the film. How I went to meet people living in Elliant. How I talked them into taking part in a movie-like fight scene that would take place in a disused bar filled with sugar objects. I speak about this moment, which is not yet the film, and which stands between the still vivid experience of the movie set and the post-production work to come.

In Watermelon Sugar, Fiasco, 2020

With Christophe Estorgues and the residents of Elliant

The first chapter of In Watermelon Sugar explores the question of destruction at the heart of the act of consuming. In Fiasco, a human bulb-eater is plagued by confused memories of a surreal barroom brawl. By choosing to collaborate with local residents, almost all of them amateurs, I wanted to focus less on violence than on the creation of a shared space, through play, dance, humor and listening, with a desire to leave room for the unpredictable.

Fiasco was first shown as a performance, but it is also a film to come.

To stay up means not to sleep. But it's also the action of looking after someone or something, taking care of it. Jamais sucre ne gâta viande is a nocturnal gathering, a time spent collectively with the audience. Together we talk, we search, we drink, we learn, we welcome, we even surpass ourselves a little. It's a time when festivity mingles with ritual, against the backdrop of a task to be accomplished: building a sugar arch.

Lunch Break is a performance made for the birds of a roadside on the outskirts of Clermont-Ferrand. It is lunchtime, I am wearing verdigris make-up to look just like the armchair I dragged myself into. For an hour my body remains motionless. The camera is perched on a supermarket display rack. I appear in its field between a funny corncob and a crown of trees. We are here waiting for birds to come.

Performance, Camerata Ataremac (string quartet)

Video, Benjamin Mouly

In-visible strings is my 2nd collaboration with composer Huihui Cheng. A string quartet is performing her piece on stage behind a translucent cinema screen. On this screen, the video shows the vibrations of elementary surfaces, insects and kitchen tools. A string made of sugar is woven into a spider web. The spider web itself is connected to a radiator and another string is linking a piece of red furniture to a knife, seemingly connecting all these various elements together. A whole is emerging, in resonance with the musical vibrations.
